

AIDA is a top-notch training company

May 13, 2015

Chamber of Industry and Commerce recognizes the cruise company as the best trainer in the region

For the seventh time in a row, leading German cruise company AIDA Cruises was recognized as a top-notch training company by the Chamber of Industry and Commerce of Rostock. The company was again honored with this seal of quality for its high-quality, practical training in the field of mechatronics.

Training at AIDA is of high practical relevance for work on board. AIDA Cruises cooperates with organizations including the training ship association Großherzogin Elisabeth e.V. The maritime training of mechatronics technicians, ship operation engineers, navigators, and ship electricians includes an internship lasting several weeks aboard the tall ship Großherzogin Elisabeth. The seafaring basic training is completed prior to duty on board.

102 young people are currently engaged in nautical training or studies with AIDA Cruises. Applications are still possible for the start of the study on September 1, 2015.

The market leader for cruises in Germany offers professional challenges for leaders and skilled employees on board its ships as well as on land. In the coming years, AIDA Cruises will commission two new ships, taking its total fleet up to 12 vessels in 2016. At the moment AIDA Cruises has 6900 employees working on land and on board the ten AIDA ships. More information can be found at www.aida-jobs.de.
